A Precious Loot

It was late in the evening and the traffic flow into and out of Norton was light. Placing a suction pad against the window, Davison, using glass cutters, cut a circular hole in an office window near the receiving bay to the magnificent building. With a loud 'plop', the window pane gave way to the suction of the plumber's tool. Putting his hands through the window, he released the window handle.

"You stay under the trees in the darkness and keep watch," Davison ordered Ranias. They entered the museum. The door had been locked from inside and the key left in the door. A simple job for an experienced burglar!

Placing a sheet of newspaper under the door so that only a little of the sheet was left in his part of the room, Davison got busy. He manipulated the key so that it withdrew itself out of the socket onto the floor on the newspaper. Then bending down, he gently pulled the newspaper through the opening at the bottom of the door. The key came through as well. It was now easy to unlock the door into the gallery.

He was not inside. There was barely enough time to admire the attractive paint on the wall of the gallery. He grabbed the golden beads and ivory. Immediately, he carried the loot and off he went out through the same route.

Rights Versus Responsibilities

Rights and responsibilities are the two sides of the same coin. One cannot exist without the other. Responsibilities without rights are mere slavery. Similarly, rights without responsibilities amount to lawlessness. In any civilized society, rights and responsibilities must go side by side.

In today's world, everybody talks much about his rights. There is a great hue and cry if our rights are infringed, but nobody seems to bother much about one's responsibilities. That is why there is a great unrest in our present-day life. Actually, responsibilities come first, and rights afterwards. Many a time, one man's right is another man's responsibility, and vice versa. For example, every man has the right to have an undisturbed sleep. So it becomes the responsibility of his neighbour not to tune his radio at too high a pitch.

If we want to enjoy our rights, we should act in such a way that the rights of others are not violated. It can happen only if we take due account of our responsibilities also. In short, rights and responsibilities are complementary, and not contradictory.

It is difficult to agree on which rights should be guaranteed to a citizen. For example, does a child have the right to be educated in his/her mother tongue? Some enthusiasts may say, "Certainly." Others may say that while everyone must have a right to education, the government should not be forced to spend money to employ special teachers for the language of every group and community.

Take another example. Does every adult have a right to job? Some will say, "Yes." Others will disagree and say that this is a privilege, not a right. They say that in these days of population explosion, it is not possible for any government to ensure full employment.

There can be disagreement on such controversial issues, but there can be no disagreement on such things as the freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom from want, and freedom from fear. Every nation worth the name must ensure these rights for her citizens.

Hubris

The story of Icarus is a famous myth from ancient Greece. Icarus was the son of Daedalus, a brilliant inventor and craftsman. Daedalus had built a labyrinth for King Minos of Crete, but when he wanted to escape, he built wings for himself and Icarus using feathers and wax.

As they flew away from Crete, Daedalus warned Icarus not to fly too close to the sun, as the heat would melt the wax and cause him to fall. However, Icarus, filled with the thrill of flying, ignored his father's warnings and soared higher and higher.

As predicted, the wax melted, and Icarus' wings disintegrated, sending him plummeting into the sea below. Daedalus, unable to save his son, flew away, mourning the loss of Icarus.
